The corner-stone of the new Lewis Avenue Congregational Church, to cost 160,000, with a seating capacity of 1,200, so,000, with a seating capacity of 1,200, was laid this afternoon at Madison street and Lewis avenue, Brooklyn.

The pastor of the church, Rev. Robert J. Kent, put the stone in place, and a number of prominent preachers spoke. The edifice will be built of light-colored brick on a brown-stone foundation, and trimmed with terra cotta.

In the lead box to go into the cornerstone will be a list of the members of the church, of the contributors to the building fund, and copies of the newspapers.

Comptroller Corwin and Treasurer Adams Get Angry.

There was a lively time at the meet this morning, and for a few minutes I ooked as though some hard words would pass between Comptroller Halsey expenses of the city, and County Treasthe good-wil of the constituency of the party that occupy positions in the city. Mr. Corwin inquired about the posi-tions of dock inspectors. Mr. Adams did not seem to like the inquiry, but tried to make light of the questions put to the City Works Commissioner, in whose de-partment the dock inspectors are em-ployed.

city Works Commissioner, in whose department the dock inspectors are employed.

City Works Commissioner Adams's answers to Mr. Corwin's questions tended to admit that many of the dock inspectors were really supernumaries.

County Treasurer Adams did not like it. His face flushed and he threw a book on the table saying:

"This talk is all nonsense. Why bother with these dock matters?"

Mr. Corwin jumped to his feet and turning to the County Treasurer said:

"You do not constitute a majority of this Board, and I want to show that the city loses thousands of dollars every year by employing these dock inspectors. Is the people's money we are apprapriating, and not our own."

"Oh, it makes me tired." exclaimed Mr. Adams.

Mr. Adams.
Mayor Boody rapped for order, and tried to smooth the matter over.
Mr. Corwin sat down, and the work proceeded. Mr. Corwin sat down, and the work proceeded.

It is likely from these indications that several of the dock inspectors will lose their positions next year.

The Board called upon Health Commissioner Griffin to answer questions about the large amount of money needed in his department.

Dr. Griffin laid great stress on the many smallpox cases in the city that had to be cared for.
